1. The Resettlement Law introduced by the Yugoslav Government stipulated that every family domiciled in the non-productive regions of Yugoslavia (i.e. Montenegro, Herzegovina, Bosnia, Dalmatia and Lika), which suffered at the hands of Tito's enemies, was entitled to receive land and housing on Fascist or Nazi property situated in the country's more productive areas.
2. The areas in question chiefly lie in the vicinity of the Sava and the Danube.
3. Only persons known to be adherents of the regime, however, have been given land and a house of their own; in all other cases the land and house remains State property and the land is cultivated on the collective (kolkhoz) system. Settlers of this kind become merely State laborers. A book is given each worker in which the number of hours and the work he has done is recorded.
4. These settlers receive no wages; they are entitled to draw instead from the National Co-ops the prescribed minimum necessities, while the products of their labor go entirely to the State.
5. Discontented with such conditions the settlers are leaving the "sadrugas" in large numbers and returning to their old homes claiming the climate does not suit them, or that there is insufficient water or some other excuse.
